Comprehensive solutions to improve indoor air quality

Mr. Donald Tong, JP, the Permanent Secretary for the Environment / Director of Environment Protection

The Environmental Protection Department's Indoor Air Quality (IAQ) Certification Scheme recognizes good IAQ management practices, and raises public awareness on the importance of a healthy indoor environment.

In recognizing and promoting good IAQ management practices, the Environmental Protection Department (EPD) has implemented the IAQ Certification Scheme for Offices and Public Places since 2003, with an aim to raise the awareness of good indoor air quality in the community

Throughout the years, the number of premises participating in the scheme has continued to rise. There are now approximately 1,400 certificates registered, a 16 fold increase as compared with some 80 certificates in 2004. This proves that the scheme has successfully brought the issue of indoor air quality to the attention of the general public.

This year's IAQ Certification Award Ceremony cum Technical Seminar was held on June 6, to commend organizations which have paid efforts in achieving good indoor air quality. Mr. Donald Tong, JP, the Permanent Secretary for the Environment/ Director of Environment Protection, commended the awarded premises owners and property management companies for their commitments and efforts in maintaining a healthy indoor environment, which has set good examples for others to follow.

"People spend around 70% -80% of their time indoors," said Mr. Tong. "Therefore, the quality of indoor air at homes, offices, shopping malls, and other public places can have a significant impact on the health of everyone."

During the ceremony, EPD presented awards to certificate holders of Excellent and Good IAQ Classes, as well as special awards to the top 10 organizations with the highest participation rates, and those organizations whose premises have joined the scheme for 10 years.

In the technical seminar following the ceremony, professionals and premises managers shared their expertise and experience in achieving good IAO

Prevention and control of indoor mould

Prof. Lilian Vrijimoed Kwan,

BNU-HKBU United International

Associate Vice-President,

With a particular focus on fungal biology, Prof. Lilian Vrijimoed Kwan, Associate Vice-President of BNU-HKBU United International College, shared her expertise on indoor moulds and its relation to indoor air quality.

"Moulds is a common term for a group of microscopic fungi, which are microorganisms that live on dead organic matter; they can cause damage to food, textile, leather, carpet and various building materials," she

College explained. "Inhaling mould spores and dust particles, or touching mould patches on walls, may cause allergic reactions in mould-sensitized individuals."

Different fungi could have different effect and everyone has different sensitivity to moulds, thus there are currently no threshold exposure limits for air contaminants of fungal origin. The focus of the counter measures is not to consider the extent of mould growth, but rather to remove all visible moulds. Whenever moulds are found or there is musty smell, it is necessary to investigate and determine the location, extent and damage of the mould, and take remedial measures.

For mould growth, moisture is essential and dust is also a good source of nutrient as it contains biological particles. In suitable temperature (around 20 to 26 degree Celcius) and high relative humidity environment, the mould will grow rapidly.

controlled by controlling moisture and dust indoors. Having an effective mould prevention and control plan is important too. To help reduce mould exposure, elimination of moisture intrusion, water leaks, and removal of mouldy items, as well as regular or weekly vacuuming using cleaners that have high-efficiency particulate air (HEPA) filtration, or central vacuum systems with adequate filtration, are effective ways of addressing the mould problem.

Good air ventilation designs and advanced air-conditioning system

The Kai Tak Cruise Terminal, an important tourism infrastructure in Hong Kong, has achieved the Excellent Class under the IAQ Certification Scheme since its operation in 2013, which has good air ventilation design and advanced air-conditioning and handling facilities.

Mr. Eric Hui. Manager Tourism Commission

The advanced air-conditioning system is equipped with double layer filter, air purifier, and a UV disinfection system, and is maintained by professional staff of the Electrical and Mechanical Service Department in accordance with the established maintenance procedures.

"To maintain good indoor air quality, routine maintenance is crucial," said Mr. Eric Hui, Manager of Tourism Commission. "Regular communication and close cooperation among the operation and maintenance team, from senior staff to frontline workers, are also key to maintaining excellent IAQ."

A holistic approach to better air quality

Due to close proximity to the Tseung Kwan O Industrial Estate and landfill facility, TVB City is inevitably affected by

Mr. Kevin Tse, Assistant General Manager (Human and Production Resources) of TVB, pointed out that remedial measures, including independent air measurements, have been taken to ensure a safe and healthy indoor working environment for their staff.

"In addition to using air purifiers and high-tech filters, we tried to close the windows and maintain a positive pressure to prevent ingress of external pollutants. We also conduct frequent monitoring and measurements of IAQ in addition to fulfilling the requirements of the IAQ Certification Scheme," he continued. "Getting the Good Class certificate has assured our commitment of IAQ to the staff and enhanced their morale. Besides, not only does the good IAQ help safeguard the health of our workers, it also bolster our corporate image."

It is, she stressed, impossible to eliminate all moulds and mould For more information about IAQ and the Certification Scheme, please visit the dedicated website at www.iaq.gov.hk.
